1. The first part of the paper is devoted to a general discussion of the principles of the theory of the function of the mind. It is shown that the mind is not a passive organ, but an active organ, and that it is capable of receiving information from the outside world, and of processing this information in a way which enables it to form a picture of the world as it is. This picture is then used to guide the actions of the individual, and to enable him to adapt himself to his environment.

1. The first part of the paper is devoted to a general
functions of a complex variable. It is shown that the theory of functions of a complex variable is essentially the same as the theory of functions of a real variable, and that the only difference is that the functions are now defined on a complex plane instead of a real line. This is achieved by introducing the concept of a complex number, which is defined as a pair of real numbers, and by showing that the operations of addition, multiplication, and division on these pairs are the same as the operations on the real numbers. The theory of functions of a complex variable is then developed in a similar manner to the theory of functions of a real variable, and it is shown that the theory of functions of a complex variable is essentially the same as the theory of functions of a real variable, and that the only difference is that the functions are now defined on a complex plane instead of a real line.

Handwritten text in a cursive script, likely a historical document or manuscript. The text is written in a dark ink on aged, slightly discolored paper.
